III. Research

Areas of Interest

He is currently working on:

- the features and ways of functioning of the European Green Deal as a regulatory project
- the changing legal construction of sustainability (sustainable development, ecological primacy, ecosystems' health and conservation)
- the administrative law of circular economy and its relevance for the the European economic constitution
- the use made by public administrations of artificial intelligence, big data and blockchain, and its impact on the principles and rules of administrative activity

In the last ten years, his research has focussed on:

- the institutional and legal dynamics of European administrative integration
- the new frontiers of regulation in the regional/transnational European horizon
- the transformations of administrative law in the interplay between legal orders
- the diversity of the overall paradigms of administrative law

Quality and impact of publications

He has published four monographs (one of which as co-author with Claudio Franchini), edited ten volumes together with other scholars, about 130 chapters in books and articles, and several handbooks' chapters, case-notes, book-reviews and other minor products (see the list of selected publications).

The quality and impact of his research are illustrated by the global reach and reputation of some of the journals in which his articles have been published (e.g. Common Market Law Review, International Journal of Constitutional Law, Cambridge Yearbook of European Legal Studies, European Public Law), by the variety of the publishing journals, by the quality of the editors (including scholars of the stature of Jean-Bernard Auby, Sabino Cassese, Paul Craig, Giandomenico Falcon, Carol Harlow and Peter Huber) as well as of the national and international publishers (Cambridge University Press, Oxford University Press, Springer, Cedam, Il Mulino, Giuffrè).
